Jazzie Ramos is at a crossroads in her life. Her best friend has just gotten married and doesn't need her help anymore. Since Jazzie has always taken care of Jess, she really doesn't know what to do with herself now. The band she plays fiddle for is finally successful, they even have a platinum record to their credit, so Jazzie wonders why she isn't happier about her new found fame and fortune. Even while playing in paradise at a friend's wedding in Tahiti, she has a hard time appreciating the beauty around her. Until she reconnects with Beau Bowman, a hotter-than-hell Texas Ranger she'd met the year before.

Things definitely heat up then, but a frantic call from her mother telling her that her that her younger brother is in trouble cuts her time in Paradise short. When she gets home to Dallas, Jazzie realizes that Beau has followed her home. He tells her that her brother is involved with some very shady people, and there is no way he's going to let her go it alone. Jazzie knows she needs Beau's help but also knows she is she just asking for trouble by accepting it. To help her, Beau would have to meet her family, including her five, overprotective older brothers who watched her like pit bulls. How would she hide that she'd spent a week in paradise in the green-eyed lawman's arms? Or the fact that she'd given him what her brothers had been protecting like seasoned soldiers for twenty-six years? But the biggest question of all was how could she not accept the help of the one man who could save her brother?
